The campaign in Kentucky is rapidly assure ing increased importance almost with every passing hour. The lethargic indifference manifested by the enemy a few weeks since in refer ence to the destiny of that State, is now being followed up by active and vigorous movements. with the evident intent of contesting every inch of ground before permitting a further advance of the Confederate army on her soil. We no longer hear of the transmission of troops from the Northwest to the Potomae for the defense of Washington, as was the case some twenty days ago, but the tide has commenced to ebb in the opposit
